

Residential Care and Dementia - 01

DECIDING ON RESIDENTIAL CARE

This Help Sheet provides information for families and care partners about the types of residential care available for people with dementia, what to look for and some practical suggestions for making the move.

Making the decision to find an alternative to caring for a person with dementia at home can be one of the most difficult decisions families and care partners will make. This may be particularly true if the person with dementia is a long-term partner.

Being prepared can help make this decision less stressful. Knowing about the services, government policies and costs of residential care beforehand can help you make the best decision, even if the decision must be made quickly.

Where to begin

Talk to:

- Your doctor
- Alzheimer's Association
- Other families and care partners.

Specific dementia units

These are units designed specifically for people with dementia. Not all people with dementia require a specific dementia unit. People with special care needs, such as those who may not be safely accommodated in general residential facilities, are best suited for these units.

Assessment for residential care

As applications will usually have to be made to several facilities it may be necessary to visit many places. Try to work through the list of facilities in an organized way taking notes as you go. If possible, take a friend or family member on the visits. Trust your intuition and common sense when assessing residential care facilities for a person with dementia.

Residential care decision-making checklist

- What is the attitude of managers and workers – do they listen to you and ask for information?
- Does it feel like a friendly, welcoming place?
- Is there somewhere to sit privately?
- Is it OK for you to come to help the person with dementia eat and shower?
- Can the person have his or her own doctor?
- Are you satisfied with medical services and specialist services?
- What is the medication policy?
- Are there procedures in place in case of fire?
- Is there at least one person on duty at all times?
- Has the fee structure been fully explained? Are there extra costs?
- What are the individual resident's rights– own belongings, pets, mail, religious beliefs?

Residential Care and Dementia - 01

- Are you satisfied with the services and range of activities and choices for recreation?
- Are you satisfied with visiting times and access for family members?
- Can outings, overnight stays and holidays with family members be easily arranged?
- Do other residents appear well cared for?
- Does anyone speak the language of the person with dementia?
- Are there additional services such as hairdressing and massage provided?
- Is there assistance for you and the person with dementia in preparing for the move?
- Will you be asked for suggestions and comments?
- Is there a policy for having your concerns looked into?
- Are surroundings such as buildings, grounds and individual rooms suitable?
- What training have staff had?
- Can you join a residents' and relatives' committee?
- Can increased needs be catered for?

Based on The care partner experience: An essential guide for care partners of people with dementia, Commonwealth Department of Health and Ageing 2002

Planning for the move

Once a place becomes available in a residential facility a decision may need to be made very quickly, so it is helpful to plan the move in advance.

Many people with dementia can be disturbed by change. Explain simply and gently where and why they are moving. Emphasize the positive aspects such as new friends and enjoyable activities. If possible, introduce the person with dementia to the new facility gradually so that the place becomes a little more familiar and a little less confusing and frightening. Sometimes of course this is just not possible, especially if the move must be made quickly.

Ensuring that their new room has as many familiar items as possible may help with the move. Family photos and familiar prints or paintings on the wall and familiar bed coverings can make the new room look a little like their own bedroom at home.

Label all personal items with large, easy to read identification. Check if the facility provides a labelling service, as this may save you some time.

During this initial moving stage it will take time for both the person with dementia and their family and care partners to adjust to the new situation. Expect a period of adjustment. People do settle. Many do better in a structured environment – they feel more secure and get more stimulation.

There is no right number of times to visit or length of time to stay. Some people want to visit frequently during this time. Others will want to rest and recover from the strain of caregiving. The important thing is to make each visit as rewarding as possible.

Residential Care and Dementia - 01

Remember

It is important to take care of yourself when the move takes place. Residential staff will be looking after the person with dementia – consider who is going to help you now. Use family and friends for support during and immediately after the move.

FURTHER INFORMATION: locally call Dementia Friendly Wyoming 307-461-7134 or visit our website <http://www.dwfsheridan.org> or The Sheridan Senior Center 307-672-2240. Nationally contact the Alzheimer’s Association at 1-800-272-3900, or visit their website at <http://www.alz.org>.